" We advocate Collis Curve toothbrushes mainly for people with learning disabilities where carers are having difficulty gaining access and being able to clean all surfaces for long enough with a conventional toothbrush. For people with physical impairments the Collis Curve enables the person to brush effectively in a shorter time, which is important where fatigue is an issue, for example in MS and Parkinson's. The relatively small head means the brush can be accommodated more easily than conventional brushes."

"The unique design of the Collis Curve toothbrush makes the removal of plaque more effective whilst at the same time massaging the gums without hurting them. The brush itself can be used by children, people with learning difficulties, and carers helping their clients who are unable to brush their teeth unaided, and helps to promote good oral hygiene. The support of the suppliers of Collis Curve is also very special in this more impersonal world, and I can fully endorse its effectiveness in improving oral health both in my job as a Senior Dentist working with Special Care patients, and as the Secretary of the British Society of Disability and Oral Health."

Dear Mo – I'm very impressed and Lily, my 12 year old daughter with Downs Syndrome is using hers all the time and the differences to how clean her teeth look is remarkable. Although I initially thought the Junior brush looked too small, she is finding it very easy to use and seems to be brushing a bit longer than she was with the electric brush (about ten seconds!). Overall I am very pleased and think for a child with special needs they are well worth the extra cost. I have passed some info on to our dentist and a friend, and will publicise the brush at our local respite care organisation, PACSO, where I am a committee member."

We are delighted at how well the Collis Curve cleans my son's teeth and already, after only a couple of weeks his teeth look a lot whiter and his gums are a lot less inflamed than they were. My son has profound autism, severe learning difficulties and epilepsy, so your toothbrush has made cleaning his teeth an altogether less traumatic event. I have ordered more of your brushes for some of my friends who have children with the same type of problems that we have with our son. We are certainly very satisfied customer. Thanks."

Alan Peaford – Chairman CdLS Foundation UK and Ireland

"We first heard about the Collis Curve toothbrush from a specialist dentist in the States. We brought some back and trialed them with our learning impaired youngsters – the results were remarkable. At last we found something that made a real difference. The Collis Curve toothbrush is now being used by people with Cornelia de Lange Syndrome across the UK and Ireland with great effect. Parents are reporting much better dental care as a direct result. Thank you for being there with such a great product."
